The Case for Sir Nathaniel Dunlop

Laurence Brown Douglas, born Lawrence Brown in Edinburgh on June 14, 1907.

Of the two Dunlop men, Sir Nathaniel has the stronger documented connection to Shieldhill in 1906. A newspaper places him there welcoming visitors. The medical records establish his nephew Binnie’s profession. The missing link for both men is Agnes herself.

What Laurence’s daughter remembered. Constance Anderson Douglas told her son that Laurence’s father was a doctor at the estate and that a gardener took him in. Her account gives us two descriptions. Laurence’s birth registration names no father.

Family edition in large print. The case is followed by fourteen selected documents, four walking maps, the dated Leith readings and four original weather sheets.

The man at Shieldhill

Nathaniel Dunlop was born at Campbeltown on April 7, 1830. He spent half a century with the Allan Line, the Glasgow shipping company whose steamers carried tens of thousands of Scots to Canada, became senior partner of its firm, James & Alexander Allan, and chairman of the Clyde Navigation Trust. His wife died within weeks of the birth of their only child, Ellen, and he never remarried.

In 1898 he bought Shieldhill, near Biggar, from the Chancellor family, who had held it since 1434, and with it the village of Quothquan below the house and its cottages. When he died at Shieldhill in 1919, his will left his daughter alone £100,000.

A home, a hall, and a village

“Domestic servant” is what Agnes Brown wrote when she registered her son. The same record gives her usual home as Gean Cottage, Shieldhill. Those are two different pieces of information. The entry leaves her employer unnamed. It gives us no basis for placing her at work in the mansion, identifying who paid her wages, or saying she attended a particular gathering.

Three places matter. Shieldhill House was the Dunlops’ private residence. A reported supper in its dining room brought tenants and servants there as invited guests. Shieldhill Hall was a separate building in Quothquan. Nathaniel and his daughter Ellen built it in 1903 for evening worship. It later housed winter lessons and a concert. Gean Cottage was the address Agnes gave in 1907. The project’s comparison of modern coordinates puts the cottage about 400 feet from the hall in a straight line. The mansion was farther away.

The same household could invite a villager to worship, provide a room for a class, and receive her socially. Nathaniel also owned houses in the village. A May 1906 water-supply report establishes that much. The account cited here does not name Gean Cottage. A valuation roll or rental naming its proprietor and occupier would answer the narrower question.

Who was actually there?

January 1, 1902

Supper and dancing inside Shieldhill House

The Hamilton Advertiser named Mr and Miss Dunlop as hosts. Tenants, villagers, estate servants and house servants came to supper and a dance in the mansion. The paper described supper in the dining room. It is direct evidence that the owners opened their private house across employment and social lines on this occasion. Agnes would have been sixteen. The report gives no evidence that she danced there or that this happened every year.

Hamilton Advertiser, January 4, 1902, page 6

December 1905

A lecture and Christmas party in the hall

The newspaper attributed the invitation for the lecture to father and daughter and reported a Christmas party in the hall. The named invitation establishes sponsorship. It cannot supply a guest list or put either host at every event.

Hamilton Advertiser, December 30, 1905, page 6

March 9, 1906

A bowling club supper in the village schoolroom

About seventy sat down to supper and a dance followed. The club organized the event. The report names the Rev. Mr Picken and local musicians. It names neither Dunlop nor Agnes. This is an important comparison: Quothquan also had gatherings organized outside the mansion and the Dunlops’ hall.

Hamilton Advertiser, March 17, 1906, page 6 · Issue reference

July 11, 1906

From Biggar to the hall, then to Shieldhill

This is the closest dated evidence presented here for Nathaniel at an estate gathering before the estimated autumn conception. More than seventy members and associates of the Biggar and Culter branch of the Scotch Girls’ Friendly Society travelled from Biggar. Ellen met them at Quothquan. The Rev. C. Ross Lowdon conducted the service. The visitors went on to Shieldhill, gathered for tea at half past four and enjoyed the gardens and pond. The paper specifically describes Mr Dunlop arriving from the city and welcoming them. Ellen organized the visit. Nathaniel’s reported arrival places him there for part of it. The clipping lists neither Agnes nor Binnie. It supplies no evidence of a private meeting.

Lessons and the closing concert

The April 6 report describes a teacher coming from Glasgow twice a week, music lessons and farm servants learning to read music. At the closing concert, Nathaniel chaired and Ellen played the piano. About two hundred people attended. The report places the owner publicly at the hall during Agnes’s pregnancy. It cannot identify where he was on a particular day the preceding autumn.

Hamilton Advertiser, April 6, 1907, page 6

March 29, 1910

A crowded hall, three years after the birth

The report names Sir Nathaniel in the chair, W. F. Addie as violin teacher, Miss Reid as a singer and Mrs M’Lellan in connection with needlework. The activities outlasted the period of the pregnancy. They also depended on teachers, clergy, performers and families whose names survive alongside those of the owners.

Hamilton Advertiser, April 2, 1910, page 6 · Issue reference

How much influence did one household have?

Consider the July visit from a guest’s perspective as far as the report permits. The society assembled in Biggar. Ellen met the party, guided it to worship and hosted it at her family’s home. The minister led the service. The secretary reported on the society. Nathaniel arrived later. The distinction matters. The story preserves the authority of the landowner, the organizing work of his daughter, and the independent roles of the society and church.

The evidence supports a concentrated form of estate patronage. The Dunlops supplied premises, extended invitations and presided at public occasions. People who might work on the estate could also encounter the family as neighbours, pupils, worshippers and guests. The newspapers give us the hosts’ public reputation. They tell us little about how a young servant experienced those relationships in private.

There is no account here from Agnes describing pressure to attend, surveillance, punishment for staying away, control of courtship, or a demand for secrecy. No source cited here identifies Shieldhill as a cult. The records can support a precise question about social power: did access to housing, worship or assistance depend on maintaining the family’s favour? Tenancy terms, private correspondence, church minutes and testimony from residents would carry more weight on that point than newspaper praise.

Nathaniel and Binnie, compared Presence. Nathaniel has an on-site sighting in July 1906. His absence from the start of the festival is part of that evidence, too. Binnie's relationship to the owner is documented in census and family records. His 1907 medical entry gives 16 Carlton Place, Glasgow. His former school's register, published in 1905, gives Charteris House, Woodford Green, Essex. Neither address fixes his daily movements. No dated source presented here places the nephew at Shieldhill in the relevant autumn. No dated source places either man together with Agnes.

What the word "doctor" can mean. Binnie was a qualified medical practitioner before the pregnancy. Nathaniel received an honorary Doctor of Laws in April 1907. That distinction came after the estimated conception and before the birth. In June a newspaper used "Dr" for Nathaniel. If the family recollection specifically meant a practising physician, it points more naturally toward Binnie. If it preserved the title by which a man was known later, Nathaniel remains possible. Laurence's daughter supplied a description, not either man's name.

Age, standing and opportunity. In autumn 1906 Agnes was twenty, Binnie thirty-two and Nathaniel about seventy-six. Nathaniel was a shipping executive with an estate and a public role. His position helps explain why his movements appear in newspapers. It does not establish a relationship or payment. Binnie may have left fewer public traces. Counting articles about one man and comparing that total with silence about the other would exaggerate the difference.

Why Nathaniel leads. One man can be placed in the social setting itself, at a dated function in the relevant year. For the other, the chain stops at kinship, profession and addresses elsewhere. That is a defensible order for pursuing the two men. It gives no probability of paternity, and the identity of the father could lie outside the Dunlop family.

Follow Agnes through the records

The neighbours. In 1901 Agnes lived with her uncle at Lime Tree Cottage. Mary Archibald, a sewing mistress, was recorded at Gean Tree Cottages. Mary’s brother Alexander, a domestic gardener, headed a household recorded at Shieldhill with his wife Annie and a servant. The census does not say which building the gardener occupied. Similar cottage names six years apart are a reason to track tenants. They do not establish that Mary and Agnes shared a household during the pregnancy.

The birth. Agnes gave birth at nine in the evening on June 14, 1907, at the Royal Maternity Hospital in Edinburgh. She registered Lawrence Brown on July 4. The father’s entry is blank. Autumn 1906 is an estimate from the birth date. A gestational age or an earlier clinical entry could shift that estimate. A summer festival and a winter concert sit on either side of the period that matters most.

Edinburgh. The electoral rolls list a Robert Douglas at 18 Lochrin Place around the time of the birth. In the 1911 census three-year-old Laurence was in the Douglas household at No. 16. Those are strong pieces of the child’s history. They leave the date of his move, the person who arranged his care, and the identity of his father unanswered. Likewise, Nathaniel’s reported appearances in Glasgow on June 21 and July 2, 1907 concern the registration period, months after the estimated conception.

The family account. Laurence's daughter, Constance Anderson Douglas, told her son that her father's father was a doctor at the estate and that a gardener took him in. Her recollection is preserved in her own right as family testimony. The identification of a gardener and two possible meanings of "doctor" makes her account investigable. It does not establish who took custody of the baby or who fathered him.

What would change the finding?

A record from autumn 1906. The first target is a dated household diary, letter, guest book, estate account or local report placing either man and Agnes at the same address in approximately August–October. A long absence documented across that period would weaken that man's case. A shared event would establish an opportunity to meet. A private letter acknowledging a child would carry much greater weight.

An address with a name attached. The 1905–06 and 1906–07 valuation rolls and any surviving rent book could identify the owner and tenant of Gean Cottage. A wage book or hiring agreement naming Agnes could identify her employer. The two records would answer different questions. Class registers or festival membership lists could settle whether she attended. Even proof of attendance would leave the identity of the father open.

Acknowledgment or support. A later correction to the birth entry, a sheriff-court aliment action for child support, or a parish relief application could name a man and state who supplied the information. A claim by the mother, an acknowledgment by a man and a court finding carry different evidential weight. Hospital registers and casebooks for June and July 1907 may reveal admission, discharge or a contact. Their usefulness does not depend on naming the father.

Family DNA. A match to relatives shared by uncle and nephew could support a Dunlop connection while leaving the individual unresolved. Documented descendants of different branches, multiple independent matches and the ability to account for other shared ancestors would matter. Until a record or a discriminating set of matches links an individual to this child, Laurence’s biological father remains unidentified.

Obituary: James Dunlop, M.D.

The document

It is owing, on the other hand, to the absence in the child-mind of both the inertia of rest and the inertia of movement that it exhibits such a high degree of suggestibility.

The child-mind maintains for so short a time and in so slight a fashion any one course of action or set purpose, that almost any fresh idea—"suggestion"—from parent or play-mate can turn it aside into a fresh channel, and that, in turn, can be easily supplanted by some other, newer still.

There is so little mental inertia of rest belonging to the idea in possession of the mind that it can be easily supplanted, and the new idea has so little "momentum" that it can be easily turned out of its course for some new thing.

Thus, a "volatile nature" is one with but slight mental functional inertia of movement; a "dogged temperament" is one with much. The great obstinacy of the uncultured, and the "fixed delusion" of the lunatic, are cases of pathologically developed psychic inertia of rest.

Obituary.

JAMES DUNLOP, M.D.

DR. JAMES DUNLOP died, at the age of 67, at his house, 16 Carlton Place, Glasgow, on Wednesday, 13th March, 1901. By his death a well-known figure is removed from the ranks of the medical profession of Glasgow. Up till a few years ago, when failing health compelled him to give up a large portion of his work, he was one of the busiest men in the City, his public engagements being numerous and his private practice extensive. Of a genial and kindly disposition, Dr. Dunlop was much esteemed by all who came into contact with him. He was a most approachable man, who was at all times willing to do his best for those who sought his advice in cases of delicacy or difficulty. Possessed of a fund of humour and anecdote, his conversation was always interesting, and as a travelling companion he was delightful, wiling away the hours of a long journey with his vivacity and racy talk. We will not readily forget the pleasure we enjoyed in his society during a visit to Rome, when the International Medical Congress met in the Eternal City in 1894. Though even then in somewhat feeble health, his enthusiasm was great, his energy untiring, and his interest in the antiquities of Rome intense.

All busy medical men have, or should have, a hobby or relaxation, which, on occasion, may take their minds away from the monotonous daily routine of professional work. Dr. Dunlop had two—the study of natural history, and a taste for Egyptology. The former he gratified during his annual visits to his native Kintyre, and many of his researches on the life, history, and habits of the deep-sea fishes were published in the columns of the Glasgow Herald. He was also interested in the pathology of the inhabitants of the sea, and when he succeeded in capturing a diseased fish his pathological friends in Glasgow were frequently called to his aid. His taste for Egyptology was, perhaps, less known to his professional brethren, and we only became acquainted with it when, on one occasion, he delivered a popular lecture on the subject of his studies of the life and manners of ancient Egypt. The lecture betrayed an amount of research which was surprising when we remembered how busy in professional work the lecturer must have been when his researches were carried out.

Altogether, Dr. Dunlop was a good all-round man, possessed of a thorough knowledge of human nature. He was a Volunteer medical officer of long standing, and formed one of the Queen's guard of honour when Her late Majesty visited Loch Katrine in 1859 to open the waterworks there. At the outbreak of the Crimean War he volunteered for active medical service, but was told he was too young. In January, 1900, he went to the Cape, and did active duty in the hospital at Wynberg. We are sure that no more enthusiastic medical Volunteer proceeded to the assistance of his countrymen in South Africa; and it is a striking circumstance that although, on account of youth, he could not help the soldiers in the Crimea, he was permitted to do a valuable work for his country when he was old and approaching the gates of death. Dr. Dunlop also gave evidence before the South African Hospital Commission.

To the medical profession of Glasgow Dr. Dunlop was best known as a surgeon and as a medico-legal expert. For over twenty years he was one of the visiting surgeons to the Glasgow Royal Infirmary, his whole connection with this institution having extended to the long period of about forty years. From 1869 to 1895 he lectured on systematic surgery at Anderson's College. He was a good type of the older school of surgeons; a practical man in all his ways, and forming his judgments with shrewd commonsense. Though what was known as a practical man, he took a great and a critical interest in the scientific researches of the younger surgeons, and none knew good scientific work better, when he saw it, than Dr. James Dunlop. His long experience as medico-legal examiner for the City of Glasgow gave his opinion on all such matters the weight of authority. We have frequently admired in the post-mortem room the almost intuitive manner in which he unravelled the mystery of a difficult criminal case. In the witness-box his equanimity was difficult to disturb and his evidence not easy to break down.

For many years Dr. Dunlop took an active interest in the affairs of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons, and some years ago he filled the office of Visitor. In his later years he acted as a Governor of the Victoria Infirmary and of the Samaritan Hospital for Women, devoting much of his time to the affairs of these institutions.

Dr. Dunlop was born in Campbeltown, and was educated at the grammar school there. He took his degree of M.D. at the University of Glasgow in 1857, and was admitted a Fellow of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons on 4th June, 1860. His whole professional life was passed in Glasgow. His wife and six sons and two daughters survive him. Of his sons, one, Dr. Binnie Dunlop, is at present on active service as a civil surgeon in South Africa, and another is a member of the English Bar.

Dr. Dunlop was too busy a man for many contributions to medical literature; but the following list of papers from his pen will show the bent of his mind in professional writing:—(1) "Notes on Acupressure as applied to 'Street Surgery'" (8vo, Glasgow, 1867); (2) "Contribution to Aseptic Surgery, being Notes of Cases" (8vo, Glasgow, 1876); (3) "Notes on Post-mortem Examinations in Criminal Cases conducted by the Crown Officials in Glasgow" (8vo, 1893); (4) "Address to the Glasgow Southern Medical Society on the Victoria Infirmary" (Glasgow, 1896); (5) "Medical Report on the Clyde Volunteer Brigade Camp at Gailes, Irvine" (1889).

It is owing, on the other hand, to the absence in the child-mind of both the inertia of rest and the inertia of movement that it exhibits such a high degree of suggestibility.
The child-mind maintains for so short a time and in so slight a fashion any one course of action or set purpose, that almost any fresh idea—"suggestion"—from parent or playmate can turn it aside into a fresh channel, and that, in turn, can be easily supplanted by some other, newer still.
There is so little mental inertia of rest belonging to the idea in possession of the mind that it can be easily supplanted, and the new idea has so little "momentum" that it can be easily turned out of its course for some new thing.
Thus, a "volatile nature" is one with but slight mental functional inertia of movement; a "dogged temperament" is one with much. The great obstinacy of the uncultured, and the "fixed delusion" of the lunatic, are cases of pathologically developed psychic inertia of rest.

Obituary. [in Gothic lettering]

JAMES DUNLOP, M.D.

DR. JAMES DUNLOP died, at the age of 67, at his house, 16 Carlton Place, Glasgow, on Wednesday, 13th March, 1901. By his death a well-known figure is removed from the ranks of the medical profession of Glasgow. Up till a few years ago, when failing health compelled him to give up a large portion of his work, he was one of the busiest men in the City, his public engagements being numerous and his private practice extensive. Of a genial and kindly disposition, Dr. Dunlop was much esteemed by all who came into contact with him. He was a most approachable man, who was at all times willing to do his best for those who sought his advice in cases of delicacy or difficulty. Possessed of a fund of humour and anecdote, his conversation was always interesting, and as a travelling companion he was delightful, wiling away the hours of a long journey with his vivacity and racy talk. We will not readily forget the pleasure we enjoyed in his society during a visit to Rome, when the International Medical Congress met in the Eternal City in 1894. Though even then in somewhat feeble health, his enthusiasm was great, his energy untiring, and his interest in the antiquities of Rome intense.

All busy medical men have, or should have, a hobby or relaxation, which, on occasion, may take their minds away from the monotonous daily routine of professional work. Dr. Dunlop had two—the study of natural history, and a taste for Egyptology. The former he gratified during his annual visits to his native Kintyre, and many of his researches on the life, history, and habits of the deep-sea fishes were published in the columns of the Glasgow Herald. He was also interested in the pathology of the inhabitants of the sea, and when he succeeded in capturing a diseased fish his pathological friends in Glasgow were frequently called to his aid. His taste for Egyptology was, perhaps, less known to his professional brethren, and we only became acquainted with it when, on one occasion, he delivered a popular lecture on the subject of his studies of the life and manners of ancient Egypt. The lecture betrayed an amount of research which was surprising when we remembered how busy in professional work the lecturer must have been when his researches were carried out.

Altogether, Dr. Dunlop was a good all-round man, possessed of a thorough knowledge of human nature. He was a Volunteer medical officer of long standing, and formed one of the Queen's guard of honour when Her late Majesty visited Loch Katrine in 1859 to open the waterworks there. At the outbreak of the Crimean War he volunteered for active medical service, but was told he was too young. In January, 1900, he went to the Cape, and did active duty in the hospital at Wynberg. We are sure that no more enthusiastic medical Volunteer proceeded to the assistance of his countrymen in South Africa; and it is a striking circumstance that although, on account of youth, he could not help the soldiers in the Crimea, he was permitted to do a valuable work for his country when he was old and approaching the gates of death. Dr. Dunlop also gave evidence before the South African Hospital Commission.

To the medical profession of Glasgow Dr. Dunlop was best known as a surgeon and as a medico-legal expert. For over twenty years he was one of the visiting surgeons to the

Glasgow Royal Infirmary, his whole connection with this institution having extended to the long period of about forty years. From 1869 to 1895 he lectured on systematic surgery at Anderson's College. He was a good type of the older school of surgeons; a practical man in all his ways, and forming his judgments with shrewd commonsense. Though what was known as a practical man, he took a great and a critical interest in the scientific researches of the younger surgeons, and none knew good scientific work better, when he saw it, than Dr. James Dunlop. His long experience as medico-legal examiner for the City of Glasgow gave his opinion on all such matters the weight of authority. We have frequently admired in the post-mortem room the almost intuitive manner in which he unravelled the mystery of a difficult criminal case. In the witness-box his equanimity was difficult to disturb and his evidence not easy to break down.

For many years Dr. Dunlop took an active interest in the affairs of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons, and some years ago he filled the office of Visitor. In his later years he acted as a Governor of the Victoria Infirmary and of the Samaritan Hospital for Women, devoting much of his time to the affairs of these institutions.

Dr. Dunlop was born in Campbeltown, and was educated at the grammar school there. He took his degree of M.D. at the University of Glasgow in 1857, and was admitted a Fellow of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons on 4th June, 1860. His whole professional life was passed in Glasgow. His wife and six sons and two daughters survive him. Of his sons, one, Dr. Binnie Dunlop, is at present on active service as a civil surgeon in South Africa, and another is a member of the English Bar.

Dr. Dunlop was too busy a man for many contributions to medical literature; but the following list of papers from his pen will show the bent of his mind in professional writing:—(1) "Notes on Acupressure as applied to 'Street Surgery'" (8vo, Glasgow, 1867); (2) "Contribution to Aseptic Surgery, being Notes of Cases" (8vo, Glasgow, 1876); (3) "Notes on Post-mortem Examinations in Criminal Cases conducted by the Crown Officials in Glasgow" (8vo, 1893); (4) "Address to the Glasgow Southern Medical Society on the Victoria Infirmary" (Glasgow, 1896); (5) "Medical Report on the Clyde Volunteer Brigade Camp at Gailes, Irvine" (1889).

Hospital to the Douglas home

412 metres / 0.26 mile / roughly 5–6 minutes

A Former Edinburgh Royal Maternity Hospital, 79 Lauriston Place

B Douglas address in the 1906–07 and 1907–08 rolls, 18 Lochrin Place

1. From No. 79, walk west along Lauriston Place toward the Tollcross junction. You will pass Glen Street.
2. At Tollcross, use the pedestrian crossings to join Home Street heading south. Follow Home Street for about 115 metres.
3. Turn right into Lochrin Place. Walk about 70 metres to No. 18.

Robert Douglas is listed here as a machineman and tenant in the two electoral rolls. A visit by Agnes and her baby remains a possibility.

Douglas home to the registrar

1,083 metres / 0.67 mile / roughly 14–15 minutes

A 18 Lochrin Place, Tollcross

B St Giles registrar's office in 1907, 24 Forrest Road

1. From No. 18, walk east along Lochrin Place. Turn left onto Home Street and walk north to Tollcross.
2. At the junction, take Lauriston Place east. Pass the former maternity hospital at No. 79 and continue along Lauriston Place into Teviot Place.
3. At the east end of Teviot Place, turn left onto Forrest Road. Look for No. 24 near the junction.

The directory lists R. D. Robertson at No. 24. The birth entry records registration in Edinburgh on July 4. Agnes's starting point and time of day are unknown.

Princes Street Station to hospital

Caledonian Railway arrival scenario / 893 metres / 0.56 mile

A Former station frontage, Lothian Road at the Caledonian Hotel

B Former Edinburgh Royal Maternity Hospital, 79 Lauriston Place

1. Start on the Lothian Road pavement at the former station frontage. Walk south along Lothian Road, past the junction with the Western Approach Road.
2. Continue south along Earl Grey Street to Tollcross. Turn left at the junction onto Lauriston Place.
3. Walk east along Lauriston Place to No. 79. The mapped route takes roughly 12 minutes at an ordinary walking pace.

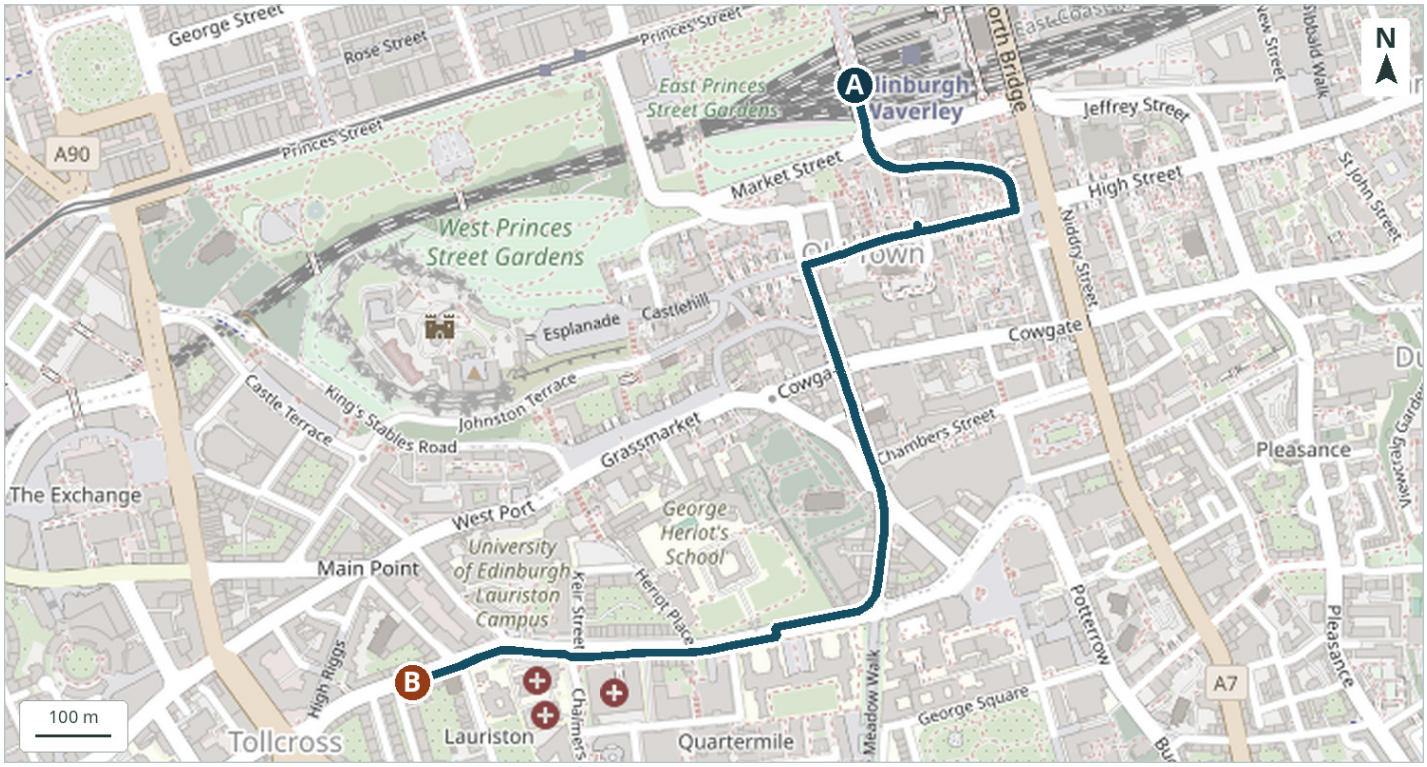

If Agnes arrived here and walked before giving birth, the hospital was uphill overall. The terrain model puts the start near 72 m and the finish near 84 m, a net rise of about 12 m (39 ft). Her train, arrival date, pace and stage of labour are unknown.

Waverley Station to hospital

Alternative arrival scenario / 1,733 metres / 1.08 miles

A Waverley Bridge, at street level outside the station

B Former Edinburgh Royal Maternity Hospital, 79 Lauriston Place

1. Head south from Waverley Bridge. Follow Cockburn Street uphill through its curve to the High Street, then turn right uphill along the Royal Mile.
2. Turn left onto George IV Bridge. Walk south past Greyfriars and along Forrest Road.
3. Turn right onto Teviot Place and follow Lauriston Place west to No. 79. Allow roughly 23 minutes at an ordinary walking pace.

This route starts on the bridge, above the platforms. The estimated net rise from the bridge to the hospital is about 27 m (89 ft). This is a second possible arrival point. No record identifies Agnes's train or confirms a walk while in labour.

Weather on the two recorded dates

Leith observing station / Friday, June 14 and Thursday, July 4, 1907

Laurence was born in Edinburgh at 9 p.m. on June 14. Agnes registered the birth on July 4. The surviving birth entry gives no hour for registration. Leith provides a nearby observation for both dates.

Date	Time	Temperature	Sky / weather	Wind
June 14	8 a.m.	52°F / 11°C	¾ cloud cover	Calm
June 14	6 p.m.	59°F / 15°C	Overcast	W, force 1
July 4	8 a.m.	50°F / 10°C	Overcast	ENE, force 3
July 4	6 p.m.	49°F / 9°C	Rain	ENE, force 3

What the rain gauge measured

From 8 a.m. June 14 to 8 a.m. June 15, Leith recorded 0.04 inches (1.0 mm). From 8 a.m. July 4 to 8 a.m. July 5, it recorded 0.59 inches (15.0 mm). Both totals include the following night. The July 4 evening observer saw rain; the registration hour remains unknown.

Reading the original reports

The morning readings appear in the reports dated June 14 and July 4. Each following day’s report gives the previous evening’s reading. The four original pages follow in that order. Temperature is the dry-bulb reading; Celsius is rounded.
